

Style Guide

In general, Inflection uses the Chicago Manual of Style (16th Edition) as a guide for grammar, punctuation and referencing. The Chicago Manual of Style is available online to subscribers at www.chicagomanualofstyle.org. A freely available citation guide can be found at www.chicagomanualofstyle.org/tools\_citationguide.html, or through the University of Melbourne's citation tool, www.lib.unimelb.edu.au/recite/citations/chicago/generalNotes.html. When preparing work for publication in Inflection, we ask that authors follow the Chicago Manual as closely as possible to maintain stylistic consistency and ensure all work is fully referenced. Inflection uses Australian or British English spelling, and asks that authors prepare their work accordingly.

Inflection uses endnotes in preference to footnote or in-text citation. When preparing work for submission, please make sure that notes are formatted as endnotes. A separate bibliography is not necessary. In general, the basic format for referencing in Inflection is as follows: Given Name Surname, Title (Location: Publisher, Date), page number(s).

In general, references should be as concise as possible. For example, only a city name is needed when referencing a place of publication – the country or state of publication is not required.

In the second and subsequent note to a previously referenced text, a short form reference should be used, in the following format: Surname, Title, pagenumber-pagenumber.

When a reference is immediately followed in the endnote sequence by an identical reference, use: Ibid.,

Where the next reference is from a different page of the same text, the correct format is: Ibid. page number(s).

Under Inflection's endnote referencing style, notes will typically not occur on the same page as their reference number. For this reason, we recommend that contributors avoid using notes for supplementary remarks. Where possible, comments should be incorporated into the body in parentheses or, if not absolutely necessary, excised.
